Introduction

1. The Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, established in accordance with Human Rights Council resolution 5/1 of 18 June 2007, held its twenty-first session from 19 to 30 January 2015. The review of Lesotho was held at the 6th meeting on 21 January 2015. The delegation of Lesotho was headed by Haae Phoofolo. At its 10th meeting held on 23 January 2015, the Working Group adopted the report on Lesotho.
2. On 13 January 2015, the Human Rights Council selected the following group of rapporteurs (troika) to facilitate the review of Lesotho: France, Ghana and Maldives.
3. In accordance with paragraph 15 of the annex to resolution 5/1 and paragraph 5 of the annex to resolution 16/21, the following documents were issued for the review of Lesotho:
 - (a) A national report submitted/written presentation prepared in accordance with paragraph 15 (a) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/LSO/1);
 - (b) A compilation prepared by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR) in accordance with paragraph 15 (b) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/LSO/2);
 - (c) A summary prepared by OHCHR in accordance with paragraph 15 (c) (A/HRC/WG.6/21/LSO/3).
4. A list of questions prepared in advance by Germany, Slovenia, Spain and the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, was transmitted to Lesotho through the troika. These questions are available on the extranet of the universal periodic review (UPR).

I. Summary of the proceedings of the review process

A. Presentation by the State under review

5. The delegation expressed its appreciation on behalf of the Kingdom of Lesotho for the opportunity to present the national report. The preparation of the national report was participatory and inclusive, and was deliberated on in an open and free atmosphere.
6. In June 2014, His Majesty, King Letsie III, had prorogued Parliament in order to pave the way for the political parties to solve their differences. Since then, tensions had arisen between the coalition partners in the Government and on 30 August 2014 there was an attempted coup. In response to the crisis, the Southern African Development Community (SADC) held a Double Troika Summit of Heads of State and Government on 15 September 2014, which led to the Maseru Facilitation Declaration. Pursuant to the Declaration, Parliament was reconvened on 17 October 2014 and dissolved on 5 December 2014. Elections were set for 28 February 2015. Preparations for those elections by the Independent Electoral Commission had commenced.
7. The delegation recalled that, during the review in 2010, Lesotho had accepted 96 recommendations and rejected 22. A workplan was thereafter drawn up to ensure coherent implementation of the recommendations. The workplan was the product of a stakeholders' consensus and had served as a working tool for stakeholders.
8. Since the previous review, Lesotho had ratified the International Convention for the Protection of All Persons From Enforced Disappearance (ICPPED) on 6 December 2013. In 2011, the National Disability and Rehabilitation Policy had been adopted, following the ratification of the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities (CRPD) in 2008.

The Protocol to Prevent, Suppress and Punish Trafficking in Persons, especially Women and Children, supplementing the United Nations Convention against Transnational Organized Crime (Protocol on Trafficking in Persons) had been incorporated into the national framework through the enactment of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act, 2011. A National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Strategic Framework and Action Plan 2014–2016 had been officially launched in July 2014. The Children’s Protection and Welfare Act, enacted in 2011 incorporated both the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child into the national framework.

9. In 2011, Lesotho had presented its report on the implementation of the Convention on All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) to the CEDAW Committee. The report on the Convention on the Rights of the Child had been submitted to the relevant Committee. Draft reports on the implementation of the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights and the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment (CAT), were awaiting Cabinet approval. Once approved, the reports would be submitted to the respective treaty monitoring bodies. The draft report on the International Covenant on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination was awaiting validation by stakeholders.

10. At the regional level, the report on the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child had been submitted, while the report on the African Charter on Human and People’s Rights was awaiting stakeholders’ validation before submission to Cabinet for approval. That was a clear indication that, despite resource constraints, Lesotho was making great effort to report under the various treaties.

11. Plans to set up a Human Rights Commission were under way. In 2011, the 6th Amendment to the Constitution, enshrining the establishment of the Human Rights Commission, had been passed by Parliament. A Human Rights Commission Bill was in place and had been awarded a certificate of approval from the Attorney General’s Chambers. The Bill had also been considered by Cabinet and would be presented before the 9th Parliament for promulgation into law. The Government would continue to strive towards the operationalization of the Commission. Workshops had been held for the media, members of Parliament, youth, inmates and correctional service staff on the work of the Commission envisaged.

12. Workshops had been held for persons with disabilities, teachers, members of Parliament and the judiciary for the purposes of highlighting human rights issues. To mark International Human Rights Day, the Minister had delivered a statement on the theme of the year. Gatherings to discuss various thematic areas of human rights had also been held for the general public.

13. The African Commission on Human and Peoples’ Rights had visited Lesotho on a promotional mission in 2012. The mission had comprised the Special Rapporteur on Freedom of Expression and Access to Information and the Special Rapporteur on Prisons and Places of Detention in Africa. Their recommendations were presently being implemented by government.

14. Poverty was rife, with more than half of the population living below the poverty line. That was mainly due to land degradation and climate change; particularly persistent drought, flooding and early frost which had caused low agricultural productivity in recent years. The worsening food deficit, as well as the increasing retrenchment of Basotho working abroad contributed to poverty.

15. To address the problem of agricultural decline, in the 2013–14 financial year, the Ministry of Agriculture had been allocated a 43 per cent increase in budget, which had enabled the subsidising of agricultural inputs such as seed, fertilizers, herbicides and insecticides. Poverty reduction programmes and policies had been designed, such as the National Strategic Development Plan, which served as an implementation strategy for the National Vision 2020 for the following five years. The Plan was expected to reduce poverty and promote the achievement of sustainable development.

16. Lesotho was on track to achieving the Millennium Development Goals relating to primary education, gender equality and empowerment of women. Efforts would be redoubled in order to achieve the remaining Goals in the post-2015 period. Lesotho would mobilize more development partners and exert decisive leadership to attain the National Vision 2020 as the Goals bore a close relationship to the seven pillars of the National Vision 2020.

17. With regard to education, free learning materials were provided, qualified teachers were employed and new schools, accessible to persons with disabilities, were being constructed in remote and rural areas. Additional classrooms in existing schools had also been built. There had been a sharp increase in the number of literate women and the school enrolment and completion rates were higher for girls than boys.

18. HIV and AIDS had had a devastating impact on the population and health-care system. Various efforts had been undertaken, including awareness campaigns, testing and treatment, male circumcision and Prevention of Mother to Child Transmission (PMTCT), whereby all HIV-infected pregnant women enrolled for PMTCT services were eligible to receive lifelong antiretroviral therapy. There was also a current national HIV and AIDS Strategic Plan.

19. Infant and child mortality had risen in recent years as a result of pneumonia, malnutrition, measles, HIV and AIDS, and diarrhoea. In addition to the subsidized fees and free maternal and health services at health centres, other government interventions included the integrated Management of Childhood Illnesses Strategy, PMTCT programmes, and policies such as the National Health Sector Policy with its Strategic Plan and the Young Child Feeding Policy. Services for women and children had also improved. More than 600 village women had been trained and employed to visit pregnant women regularly and to encourage them to visit health centres.

20. There had been an increase in human trafficking, whereby women and children fell prey to fictitious promises of employment and other means of earning a living. The Government had taken steps to ensure the protection of those vulnerable groups through the enactment of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act, 2011, implemented through the National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Strategic Framework and Action Plan 2014–16. The Ministry of Home Affairs had spearheaded a multisectoral team on anti-trafficking and there were partnerships with civil society organizations and community networks to address human trafficking through intensive community awareness-raising campaigns.

21. Lesotho was dedicated to achieving the principles of gender equality, non-discrimination and promotion of women's rights, as illustrated by the appointment of women to high decision-making positions, such as that of the Ombudsman and the Chief Justice, and the adoption of a national action plan to end gender-based violence against women. Capacity-building training sessions on gender issues and gender-based violence had been held for the police, judges, magistrates, prosecutors, chiefs, and traditional and religious leaders.

22. The best interests of the child remained at the core of the Government's agenda. The Children's Protection and Welfare Act 2011 provided for the right to education, health and opinion for all children, and protected children against exploitation and child labour. It also made provision for a Children's Court, which was now operational. Within the Ministry of Social Development, there was a department of children's services tasked with the care, protection and development of children.

23. On the issue of corruption, the Directorate of Corruption and Economic Offences had been established and a National Anti-Corruption Strategy and Action Plan had been designed. There was also the Prevention of Corruption Bill 2013, which sought to strengthen the legislative and institutional framework and elevate the status of the Directorate to that of a Commission.

24. Old correctional facilities were being demolished and new ones built. A full-time HIV and AIDS coordinator had been employed and HIV testing, counselling and treatment were provided. Condoms were being provided and all correctional facilities had a nurse and dispensary to attend to minor illnesses. All inmates received free medical care in government hospitals.

25. In response to advance questions, the delegation stated that the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, 2011, had curbed child labour. Labour Inspectors could now inspect the formal sector to ascertain the existence of child labour and investigate crimes relating to the worst forms of child labour. However, there were no available statistics on reported labour cases in the Children's Court. A programme on the elimination of child labour involving various stakeholders was currently being developed.

26. Awareness-raising and educational campaigns on gender-based violence continued to be run in an effort to prevent and combat domestic violence. There was a support programme for victims, which included counselling. The 6th Amendment to the Constitution Act of 2011 enhanced the support available to victims. Alleged perpetrators were prosecuted. The Domestic Violence Bill had been referred back for further consultations and research and , with new drafting instructions as a result.

27. The reservation to article 2 of CEDAW was partially withdrawn in 2004, and the reservations remained only with regard to succession to the throne and to chieftainship. An elected government had to be considerate to the traditional values of the society that formed its electorate.

28. Lesotho retained the death penalty under Statutory Law as a form of deterrence. However, the death penalty had not been carried out since 1995. There were appropriate safeguards in place, such as the Pardons Committee and the prerogative of mercy by His Majesty the King. Nonetheless, the Government took note of the international trend towards abolition of the death penalty.

29. With regard to the administration of justice, reforms had been undertaken to mitigate the backlog of cases and to modernize the operations of the judiciary, including the introduction of a case management tool in the High Court and the establishment of a small claims procedure in the magistrate court.

30. The Government was continuing to renovate and refurbish correctional facilities throughout the 10 districts, notwithstanding budget limitations. The use of restorative justice and other alternative dispute resolution mechanisms had been scaled up and the courts also imposed non-custodial sentences, including community service sentences, to reduce the overcrowding in correctional facilities.

31. Lesotho was committed to preventing illicit trafficking of conventional arms. The International Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons had been ratified and the Arms Trade Treaty had been signed. The Internal Security (Arms and Ammunition) Act of 1966 prohibited the possession, sale or transfer of a firearm and/or ammunition without a licence. The Counter Crime Unit had been established in March 2009 and tasked with searching for unlicensed firearms and arresting alleged perpetrators.

32. It was the ambition of Lesotho to expeditiously adopt the best human rights practices. The pace at which that ambition would be fulfilled would be determined by the availability of resources and capacity, as well society's receptiveness to those human rights practices.

33. Lesotho appreciated the technical and financial support as well as the good cooperation from several United Nations agencies and countries. The delegation also expressed appreciation for the cooperation in the preparation of the National Report and for the advance questions received, and looked forward to a constructive dialogue.

B. Interactive dialogue and responses by the State under review

34. During the interactive dialogue, 64 delegations made statements. Recommendations made during the dialogue can be found in section II of the present report.

35. The Democratic Republic of the Congo commended the progress by Lesotho and willingness to improve human rights, despite challenges. It noted the Strategic National Development Plan aimed at reducing poverty, free education, and measures to combat corruption and promote the rights of women, children, elderly and persons with disabilities. It welcomed international cooperation with Lesotho.

36. Denmark noted permission granted to allow bodies such as the International Committee of the Red Cross to visit and inspect correctional institutions and make recommendations, but noted that it had not taken steps towards ratifying the Optional Protocol to the Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment (OP-CAT). It also referred to an initiative by the Committee against Torture which aimed to assist governments to overcome obstacles to ratification and implementation of the Convention, as an avenue to assist Lesotho.

37. Djibouti appreciated the efforts by Lesotho to comply with previous recommendations, despite challenges. It congratulated Lesotho on the adoption of the Law for the protection and well-being of children and persons with disabilities. It called on the international community to provide technical assistance to Lesotho.

38. Egypt noted the approach taken by Lesotho regarding the promotion of human rights in the country and significant steps taken to establish the Children's Court; to enact the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act (2011), the Children's Protection and Welfare Act (2011), and the Education Act (2010), providing for free and compulsory primary education.

39. Ethiopia noted the achievements of Lesotho in the areas of peace and political stability, gender equality, dispensation of justice, registration of a high literacy rate, human resource development, and increased coverage of public service provision. It noted with appreciation the emphasis on alleviating poverty, ensuring food security and reducing unemployment.

40. France commended progress on stabilizing Lesotho after the political crisis of 2014 and expressed its wish that the general elections of 2015 would take place in line with democratic rules and human rights. It congratulated Lesotho on its ratification of ICPPED.

41. Gabon noted the ratification of a number of international human rights instruments, the adoption of a law on child welfare, and the adoption of measures for orphans, children and other vulnerable populations to guarantee their rights to education and health.

42. Germany welcomed the progress made in the fields of child protection, elimination of discrimination against women and political participation of women since the previous universal periodic review. It remained concerned about the continued high prevalence of violence against women and issues of discrimination and non-equality, as well as child sexual abuse, forced child/early marriage, and child labour.

43. Ghana commended the establishment of a national human rights commission and hoped that it would operate in full compliance with the Paris Principles. It also commended the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act and the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, and shared concerns expressed by CEDAW about the high incidence of trafficking in women and girls.
44. Indonesia noted that Lesotho was on track to achieve the Millennium Development Goals on universal primary education and promoting gender equality and empowerment of women. It expressed its appreciation of the draft national policy on social development and hoped that it would be approved and implemented immediately. It further noted that corruption remained one of the prevalent factors hindering development.
45. Ireland congratulated Lesotho for the progress achieved towards gender equality, but remained concerned at the level of discrimination that women still encountered in the public and private spheres. It welcomed efforts to tackle the high rates of infant and maternal mortality and noted in particular that child mortality rates remained alarmingly high.
46. Italy commended the holding of a de facto moratorium on the death penalty, welcomed the enactment of the Legal Capacity of Married Persons Act of 2006, and commended the adoption of a number of policies to enhance the protection and promotion of the rights of the child.
47. Kuwait appreciated efforts to enhance the normative and institutional framework for the promotion and protection of human rights. It also valued the procedural steps towards the implementation of the accepted recommendations of the first review, aimed at additional achievements towards the protection of human rights and freedoms.
48. Latvia congratulated Lesotho for the various laws, action plans and campaigns to protect and enhance women's rights. It welcomed the adoption of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, 2011, and the national strategic plan on vulnerable children. Latvia recognized efforts to achieve the Millennium Development Goal target for universal primary education, but remained concerned that the lack of birth registration resulted in the denial of essential services.
49. Libya noted the progress made in promoting and protecting human rights. It commended the ratification of a number of treaties, including CED, CRPD and the Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.
50. Mali noted the ratification of several international human rights instruments and the compliance of national laws with international commitments. It also welcomed action to better protect the rights of persons with disabilities and other vulnerable groups, and positive initiatives to achieve the Millennium Development Goals.
51. Mauritius commended the implementation of most of the recommendations and the development of various action plans since the previous review. It encouraged Lesotho to pursue the development of its National Human Rights Policy. It welcomed the initiatives to establish a Human Rights Commission and suggested that Lesotho consider availing itself of the experiences of Mauritius.
52. Mexico took note of the ratification of ICPPED, the adoption of the Action Plan against human trafficking and the implementation of the Law for the protection and well-being of children. While acknowledging progress and challenges, Mexico raised a concern about overdue reports to treaty bodies. Mexico made its best practices available.
53. Montenegro requested information on the activities undertaken to make the national human rights commission operational, the reasons for the lack of cooperation with treaty bodies, and activities undertaken to incorporate CEDAW into the domestic legal system. It welcomed the ratification of ICPED.

54. Morocco welcomed the ratification of ICPED and the launch of the action plan against trafficking in persons. It commended Lesotho for its efforts in the area of education. Morocco encouraged consolidation of efforts in the areas of judicial reform and the fight against corruption.

55. Mozambique commended Lesotho for adopting the National Disability and Rehabilitation Policy in 2011. It noted that Lesotho was on track to achieve the goals on universal primary education and gender equality and women's empowerment. It welcomed the National Identity Cards Act of 2011, which gave women the right to apply for an identity card without their husband's authorization.

56. Namibia commended Lesotho on efforts made to implement the recommendations, from the first review, despite several challenges. It appreciated the passing of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, 2011, which was aimed at the enhancement, promotion, protection and realization of the rights and welfare of children. Namibia commended the continued progress made to reduce poverty, particularly through social grants to the elderly and orphans and vulnerable children.

57. The Netherlands commended Lesotho for the enactment of the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, 2011 and appreciated the efforts taken to protect children in vulnerable circumstances. It remained concerned about domestic violence against women and violence committed by an intimate partner, as well as the absence of a specific prohibition of discrimination against women in domestic law.

58. New Zealand welcomed the efforts to ensure free and fair elections in February 2015 and was pleased to work with Lesotho and to share experiences in that regard. It commended progress regarding representation of women in the political sphere and welcomed the commitment to greater transparency and accountability through the fight against corruption.

59. The Niger commended progress since the first review on, inter alia, the creation of the National Human Rights Commission, the adoption of laws for the protection and well-being of children and to combat human trafficking, and the implementation of a National Action Plan to combat violence against women. It encouraged Lesotho to reach the objectives of its National Strategic Development Plan.

60. The Philippines lauded the progress made by Lesotho despite the resource and capacity constraints, most notably the enactment of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act and the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, 2011. It recognized the need for stronger partnerships to further strengthen the implementation of policies, particularly in the realization of socio-economic rights.

61. Portugal noted that Lesotho had one of the highest literacy rates in sub-Saharan Africa, and that the country was on track to achieving Millennium Development Goal 2 concerning primary education. Portugal was concerned about the disadvantaged situation of girls in accessing education, as well as reports on sexual violence and abuses committed in schools.

62. The Russian Federation took positive note of the implementation of international legal instruments. It commended Lesotho for the adoption of national legislation aimed at improving the human rights situation.

63. Rwanda congratulated Lesotho for initiatives aimed at addressing poverty reduction and ensuring economic development, commended the establishment of a National Strategic Development Plan, the improvement of the water supply and sanitation, and the domestication of the Protocol on Trafficking in Persons, and urged the international community to provide technical assistance and capacity-building, in, amongst areas, the setting up the National Human Rights Commission.

64. Senegal congratulated Lesotho for several initiatives to promote human rights, notably the adoption of the Law for the protection and well-being of children, and the design of a national policy on persons with disabilities and of an action plan against human trafficking. It called on the international community to provide technical assistance to Lesotho.

65. Sierra Leone commended the children's court, special measures on political participation of women, progress in providing free, gender-balanced education and ongoing efforts aimed at reducing the spread of HIV/AIDS, and noted that a sustainable natural disaster risk reduction strategy was crucial for economic development. It was also concerned about capacity gaps in the health sectors and encouraged international support for the development of a sound health system as well as legislation prohibiting discrimination against women.

66. Singapore noted the emphasis on raising socio-economic standards and took positive note of the National Strategic Development Plan. It further noted the efforts to fight HIV/AIDS, including through prevention, care and treatment; as well as to improve service delivery by rolling out services and resources in rural areas.

67. Slovenia welcomed the Children's Protection and Welfare Act and the increase in the age of criminal responsibility, improved water supply and sanitation, high levels of investment in education, measures taken to combat the spread of HIV, the National Action Plan to end Gender Based Violence, and measures to promote gender equality. It was concerned at discriminatory practices entrenched in customs, beliefs and traditions.

68. South Africa commended the signature and ratification of most of the international and regional human rights instruments. It reaffirmed its continued support of SADC efforts in the promotion of peace and security and encouraged the continuation of all efforts towards the promotion, protection and fulfilment of all human rights, including the right to development.

69. The delegation stated that there were plans to resuscitate the National AIDS Commission. There was a Government policy paper on the protection of children in rural areas, especially herd boys, which included ensuring that they received an education. Allegations of excessive use of force by the security forces, over the previous few months, were being investigated with the assistance of SADC. On completion of the investigation, the perpetrators would be accountable under the law.

70. The delegation recalled its earlier comments with regard to the establishment of a national human rights institution and emphasized that the relevant bill would be before the 9th Parliament for promulgation into law. On the issue of the death penalty, the delegation reiterated that the death penalty had not been carried out since 1995.

71. With regard to the reservation to article 2 of CEDAW, the delegation stated that Lesotho was moving step by step towards lifting the reservation. The delegation explained that Lesotho was bound by her traditions, which were what developed a nation. To take people away from those traditions was not easy and involved much dialogue, in which the Government was engaged, especially on the issue of chieftainship of women. Discussions were taking place with the objective of reviewing the Constitution and relevant law.

72. On the matter of corruption, active measures had been taken by the Government to strengthen the anti-corruption institution. High-profile figures were being brought to justice to show the seriousness of government in stopping corruption. The delegation stated that the Government was working hard to reduce infant and maternal mortality and provided information on the village health workers programme in that regard. With regard to persons with disabilities, the delegation informed the Working Group of the policy that was in place to protect the rights of such persons, which would eventually be approved by an act of Parliament.

73. The delegation stated that no lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and intersex persons had been prosecuted and emphasized that the matter was sensitive in the culture and society in Lesotho. The Government was engaged in dialogue on the issue with a view to reaching consensus.

74. A disaster risk management programme was in place, under which there was a health and nutrition committee, comprising various stakeholders, including government ministries, development partners and non-governmental organizations. There were also district and village disaster management teams.

75. Steps had been taken to reduce poverty through employment. A job summit had been held in August 2014, with the aim of adopting a working programme on the development of agriculture, tourism and other means of creating employment. The Government was committed to creating about 10,000 jobs per year.

76. Spain congratulated Lesotho on progress made, with the legalization in 2012 of homosexual relations. It noted the need to depoliticize public services and the armed forces, and to create institutions to safeguard human rights.

77. The Sudan commended Lesotho for its adoption of legislation and policy on human rights, particularly the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act and the Communication Act, as well as for the adoption of the National Strategic Development Plan 2013–2016, the National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Strategic Framework and Action Plan 2014–2016 and the National Action Plan on Women, Girls and HIV/AIDS.

78. Sweden noted the political stalemate in Parliament and the resolving of Parliament. It noted the attempted coup d'état, the involvement of SADC and the Maseru Facilitation Declaration, which stipulated that elections should take in February 2015. Sweden also noted the Maseru Security Accord.

79. Thailand congratulated Lesotho for ratifying ICPED and for its engagement with international organizations and stakeholders to protect human rights. It welcomed the transformation of the Department of Social Welfare into the Ministry of Social Development, with a focus on protecting vulnerable groups. It encouraged Lesotho to continue working towards achieving universal primary education. It expressed concern about the HIV epidemic and encouraged Lesotho to redouble its efforts to prevent the spread of HIV infections.

80. Timor Leste noted the positive steps taken to promote and protect human rights. It highlighted the enactment of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act, the Children's Protection and Welfare Act and the adoption of the Education Act, providing for free and compulsory primary education. It commended the implementation of the Child Grants Programme, leading to an increase in school enrolment rates and a decrease in child labour.

81. Togo commended initiatives by Lesotho to reduce poverty, ensure economic development and provide free access to health care. It encouraged Lesotho to put the National Human Rights Commission in place.

82. Trinidad and Tobago highlighted the advancement in human rights. It noted that Lesotho was plagued with domestic challenges, including poverty and food security, climate change and a high rate of HIV/AIDS. The geographical terrain of Lesotho was also a barrier to providing essential goods and services.

83. Tunisia noted the ratification of ICPED and the drafting of a national human rights policy. It encouraged ratification of OP-CAT and the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) Convention against Discrimination in Education, as well as the incorporation of CEDAW provisions into national legislation with a view to withdrawing the reservation to article 2. Finally, it urged OHCHR and the international community to respond favourably to requests for technical assistance.
84. Turkey noted human rights progress since the first review, notably the ratification of international conventions, the establishment of a National Human Rights Commission, measures to combat human trafficking and the creation of a conducive climate for the 2015 elections. Despite progress concerning gender equality, gender-based violence was a concern.
85. The United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland urged Lesotho to respect freedom of expression, association and peaceful assembly in the pre-election period and to enact legislation abolishing the death penalty. It recognized progress made on improving the status of women, but noted concerns about restrictions on women's rights under customary law.
86. The United States of America noted the commitment of Lesotho to dialogue on constitutional and parliamentary reform and looked forward to a free, fair and peaceful election. It remained concerned about human trafficking and child labour, as well as the high rate of HIV infections and urged Lesotho to ensure that treatment was provided in a non-discriminatory manner.
87. Uruguay valued the ICPED ratification and the adoption of the Strategic National Framework to combat human trafficking and its Action Plan 2014–2016. It encouraged Lesotho to implement recommendations issued by the African Commission on Human Rights and Peoples' Rights in 2012.
88. The Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela was pleased that Lesotho had adopted, in 2011, the National Policy on Disabilities, created the National Human Rights Commission and put in place the Strategic National Development Plan.
89. Zimbabwe noted that Lesotho had prioritized the raising of human rights awareness for law enforcement agencies and the promulgation of the National Decentralization Policy, and that Lesotho was on track to achieving the Millennium Development Goals on universal primary education, gender equality and women's empowerment. Lesotho had ratified ICPED and domesticated the Protocol on Trafficking in Persons.
90. Yemen noted the legislative measures taken in the context of the obligations of Lesotho under human rights treaties, such as the enactment of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act 2011. It also noted the adoption of a National Anti-Trafficking in Persons Strategic Framework and Action Plan 2014–2016, the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, 2011 and the National Strategic Development Plan.
91. Algeria noted the efforts by Lesotho to implement previous recommendations, despite financial constraints, namely the adoption in 2011 of laws for the protection and well-being of children and to combat human trafficking; and initiatives to reduce poverty and improve education and health care. It made recommendations.
92. Angola noted the ratification of CRPD and the adoption of a national policy in relation to the Convention as well as legislative measures to reinforce national mechanisms for the promotion and protection of human rights. It also congratulated Lesotho on the establishment of a National Human Rights Commission.
93. Argentina congratulated Lesotho on progress made since the previous review and commended, in particular, the ratification of ICPED, the adoption of the Law for the protection and well-being of children and of the Law on Education, and the National Program on Disability.

94. Australia expressed concern that poverty, HIV/AIDS and food insecurity continued to present significant obstacles to the enjoyment of human rights in Lesotho and welcomed the adoption of the National Strategic Development Plan. It welcomed the planned legislation to establish a human rights commission. Australia expressed concerns about the death penalty and discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation and gender identity.

95. Benin welcomed the progress made in the implementation of the recommendations. It commended Lesotho for ratifying ICPED. It also commended Lesotho for strengthening the judicial system, promoting gender equality, and for developments in the areas of health and education.

96. Botswana noted the enactment of laws on trafficking in persons and the protection of children, as well as the measures taken in relation to gender equality, poverty alleviation, and gender-based violence. It noted the efforts made to address the political and constitutional challenges. Children under the age of 15 years were engaged in domestic service, street vending and in agriculture. It also noted challenges in providing adequate health-care facilities and services.

97. Brazil was pleased at developments in Lesotho in the field of freedom of expression and the promotion of the rights of women, children and lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender persons, as well as at the creation of the Ombudsman's Office. It noted however that there was still room for improvement.

98. Canada welcomed the commitment to promote and protect human rights and encouraged Lesotho to continue to follow up on legislative steps taken to establish a human rights commission in line with the Paris Principles, as that would be an important tool to protect and promote the human rights of all persons, including the rights of women and children.

99. The Central African Republic encouraged Lesotho to ratify CAT and to guarantee the physical integrity of its citizens. It noted that, despite the difficulties, Lesotho had ratified ICPED, had introduced policy promoting the rights of persons with disabilities, and had adopted a law on the protection of the rights of the child in conformity with international instruments.

100. Chile took note of efforts by Lesotho to protect human rights, strengthen its institutional structure and to enact legal frameworks, despite challenges.

101. China noted progress in promoting gender equality, the empowerment of women, combating the trafficking of women and children, and sexual violence. It noticed difficulties in agriculture, job creation and public health. It highlighted difficulties in the prevention and treatment of AIDS and called on the international community to give more assistance.

102. The Congo welcomed ratification of ICPED and the adoption of laws to combat trafficking in persons and to promote human rights. It encouraged Lesotho to redouble its efforts to overcome economic and social challenges and to strengthen cooperation with Human Rights Council mechanisms.

103. Costa Rica took note of measures to implement previous recommendations. It welcomed progress to protect human rights, strengthen the judicial system, combat human trafficking and promote the rights of persons with disabilities and children through the adoption of Law for the protection and well-being of children.

104. Cuba commended the interest of Lesotho in promoting inclusive economic growth and its commitment to free education through the Education Law of 2010. It took note of the high rate of HIV/AIDS and the vulnerability of Lesotho to the global financial crisis. It called on the international community to provide technical assistance.

105. Kenya took note of the challenges in addressing gender inequality and the trafficking of persons. It welcomed efforts to domesticate core human rights instruments and noted the commitment to cooperate with the United Nations human rights mechanisms. Kenya encouraged the continuation of measures to address human trafficking.

106. The delegation stated that the Government had taken a stand in relation to the de-politicization of the public service. For instance, with the upcoming elections, all public officers who demonstrated an intention of becoming politicians were instructed to resign from the public service.

107. Primary education was free, an initiative also being extended to secondary schools. Bursaries were offered to students at the tertiary level. Herd boys were receiving an alternative primary education, with some links to formal education.

108. The delegation acknowledged that reports to some Committees were overdue and stated that that was largely due to the lack of capacity and resource constraints. Lesotho would do its best to comply with its reporting obligations. The law on defamation served as a deterrent and people were very rarely charged under it.

109. The Government had continued to implement the gender policy framework and empower women to contribute to development and poverty reduction. Several social protection plans for persons with disabilities, children who had been orphaned and vulnerable children had also been introduced, with the primary goal of preventing and reducing economic and social vulnerability. Child labour was predominant in the private sector. The Labour Code of 1992 was under review to provide labour inspectors with the authority to review child labour practices in the informal sector. An action plan to eliminate child labour was being developed.

110. With regard to environmental degradation, measures had been taken to prevent soil erosion through water deviation furrows and contour ploughing. The delegation stated that the Maseru Facilitation Declaration and the Maseru Security Accord would be fully implemented and that regular visits by the SADC facilitator would take place to ensure this.

111. The delegations stated that Lesotho would agree to issue a standing invitation to all the Human Rights Council mechanisms; birth registration was free of charge through public gatherings; primary health care services to women and girls were provided for a subsidized fee in all government hospitals and clinics; and clinics for the health care of women and girls were available in all 10 districts.

112. On behalf of Lesotho, the delegation extended its deepest appreciation and thanked all delegations for the questions, comments, recommendations and above all their constructive manner of engagement. Cooperation with the United Nations human rights mechanisms was an issue of high priority on the agenda of the Government. The UPR had been a worthwhile process. It allowed for reflection on priorities and needs and provided for the systematic creation of an enabling environment to enhance the realization of human rights. The delegation affirmed the commitment of the Government to uphold the human rights of all Basotho.
